Like many common pests, ants are attracted to areas where they are more likely to find a food source - which can become problematic when eating outdoors during the summer months. Ants are social insects, which means that when one enters your home, others will soon follow it. While it may be frustrating to control the number of ants you have, there are plenty of effective ways to keep the insects annoying without damaging them. Here's how to get rid of ants naturally and safely... 1. The use of citrus ants hates the strong citrus smell. Save your oranges, lemons and grapefruit peels and scatter them around the entry points. It's a natural way to deter ants without harming them. 2. Sprinkle coffee groundsCoffee great reasons to deter ants, too. Use your phone to create an ant barrier. They won't like the feeling under foot, so put them around the entry points. 3. Use mint oil if you've got ants in the bathroom or kitchen, pour some mint oil on to the cotton wool pillow and put it all over the room. It may not look beautiful, but it is a sure way to keep ants at bay because they repel a strong smell. Be sure to place them near garbage bins, compost piles or doors to the garden. 4. Cinnamon kitchen is another essential that ants do not like cinnamon. Again, place them around the areas where ants come to your home. Target for doors, windows, floors, flower pots and any small gaps. 5. VinegarThe next time you wipe your flooring, add a dash of vinegar to your water or cleaning solution. Ants also hate the smell of vinegar. Vinegar can also be used to clear down surfaces, clean mirrors (with no strips) and sterilize door handles. 6. Cayenne pepper or black pepper, a wall of pepper around the area where ants enter. Like a lot of vinegar and cinnamon, insects can withstand a strong smell. Alternatively, you can also try mixing peppers with water and creating your own homemade spray is cost-effective. This method works wonders without damaging ants. 7. Chalk ants do not like chalk lines in the garden because they disrupt their scent trail. If you have some chalk, simply draw some circles and lines on the floor around the areas you want them to stop entering. It's just a temporary solution, but it certainly stops insects in their tracks. Such a substance? Sign up for our newsletter for more articles like this are delivered directly to your inbox. Ants are not the only pests that are difficult to get rid of. Get rid of home bugs for good with various tactics.2. Make the poison easy to reach the bait stations place in areas where you have seen ants, such as under the basin and along the walls, to make as likely as possible that ants will take the poisonous bait back to the nest. Expect to see more ants when you set the bait at first. This is a good thing to control ants. This means that more ants take the bait to the colony, where they will share it with the rest of the ants, including the queen. Learn about 13 other ways to keep your home pest-free throughout the summer.3 Do not crush them after determining the poisonous taste, resist the temptation to trample on ants. They're working for you now - collect the poison and take it to the nest (these new tips will get rid of ants forever.) 4. Erase their tracksPCPathcharnee/ShutterstockAnts leave the scented trail that follows other ants. Sweeping or disinfection is not enough to eliminate the smell. Instead, mix one part vinegar with three parts of water in a spray bottle, then spritz wherever you've seen ants.5. Remember yardSpot treat ants or hills with an outdoor insecticide. For large-scale ant problems, insect killer containing bifenthrin was used as an active ingredient. First, mower, then spray pesticides on the entire garden in the early morning or late afternoon, when ants are the most active to Ant control.6. Eliminate the easy entry of back bushes, shrubs and trees that brush against your siding or roof. These provide a bridge for ants to reach your home. Avoid stacking firewood next to the house. Don't miss these warning signs your home is about to be infected.7 Hunt nestEldost Gadrov / ShutterstockFor some conquests - of carpenter ants, for example - must get rid of the nest. How to find it: Look for wet areas such as framing or flooring that are soft and spongy (this can be the result, say, plumbing or roof leakage). Look at the attic, bathrooms and exterior walls. When you find the nest, spray it with a signed insecticide for indoor use. Natural killerants you already have in your houseEntomologists (aka, bug experts) agree that natural remedies are not as powerful as pesticides to control ants. But if you want to try detox-free ways to get rid of little creatures, these are good options. ■ Lemon: squirt some lemon juice on door sills and windows. Then press the wedge into any holes or cracks the ants come through. Finally, scatter small slices of lemon peel around any outdoor entries. Strong acidity and smell can help keep pests away. ■ Flowerpots and tea: Tired of getting bites of fire ants on your patio? Place the flower bowl upside down over the ants, then pour boiling water through the drainage pit to eliminate the insect house. ■ Herbs and spices: stored nutrients such as sugar, flour and some spices can fall prey to ants. To keep food safe, slip the bay paper inside your storage containers. If you're worried about the flour or sugar that captures the flavor of the bay leaf, point the paper into the lid of the package. This trick also works inside the cabinets, where sage bags, bay, cinnamon sticks or full cloves will smell pleasant while discouraging ants from getting warm.
